Why the Gracies

The Gracie Awards are named after the late Gracie Allen. One of America's best-loved comedienne, Gracie's dedication to the entertainment industry and her craft opened doors for future generations of females.

A pioneer in motion pictures, radio and television, Gracie Allen left a legacy that embodies the character of The Gracie Awards program today.

Alliance for Women in Media Foundation is the philanthropic arm of the Alliance for Women in Media, advancing women in media through educational programs and scholarships.

Gracies Gala Experience

Celebrating 50 years, the Gracie Awards recognize women who are making positive change and who continue the discussion of what having a fulfilling career in media looks like.

The Gracies Gala is a black-tie star-studded event held annually in Los Angeles. The Gala list is comprised of visionary women who blazed the path for where the industry is today as well as those who are setting the path for the future.

These are the influencers creating opportunities for the future of women in media.

"The Gracies are the only awards ceremony we've gone to in the last three years because we feel like this particular event and group of women is so important and we are so honored to be here with them."

—Glennon Doyle

“I’m too young to have met the legendary Gracie Allen, who is the inspiration behind these awards, but I hope she and I would’ve had something, maybe a lot in common. Her iconic work as an artist paved the way for all the women who came after her, including me.”

—Carol Burnett

"Why the work of the Gracies is so important is because we experience things differently; war, peace, famine, poverty... and if you don't have our voices in the arts and on television, movies and on the sets you're not getting the whole story, and this doesn't just hurt us, it hurts everybody, it hurts men—they are deprived of half the story."

— Jane Fonda

"It's great to be in an organization that honors women and supports other women and women's voices I think are really important and I remember when they weren't so honoring an organization that honors that truth is important."

—Maria Shriver

"It's an incredible honor to be recognized by other women in our industry; they know the highs, the lows... they know the roadblocks they know the joys."

—Tamron Hall
